Experience

Paul practices as a commercial mediator who has specialised for a number of years in construction and engineering disputes. Paul is one of only a small number of mediators who sit on and is nominated by the RICS President's Panel. Paul is accredited as a commercial mediator by the RICS, MATA and the ADR Group.

Paul has been directly involved in projects ranging from a few thousand pounds to mega-projects totalling over £30 billion. For Thomas Sands Consulting, as a Chartered Surveyor, Paul specialises in providing contract advisory solutions, quantum expert reports, construction contract advice including issues regarding payment, contractual notices, claims and responses, and issues relating to suspension and termination.

Through both his management of projects and his high levels of academic and professional education, Paul has gained expert knowledge of the standard forms of contract and construction law, and the negotiation and resolution of construction and engineering disputes. To date Paul has been appointed as lead mediator in over 65 cases since 2011.

Recent Feedback

"I found Paul to be an upbeat, sensible and helpful mediator operating in difficult circumstances. He seemed to identify the merits and sticking points quickly and built a good relationship with my client."

Gideon Scott-Holland, Barrister at Keating Chambers, London.

"Mr Whittle conducted himself professionally in all respects, and I found him to be an effective mediator. In particular, I recall that he was able to inspire trust and confidence in my lay client and was comfortable talking about the technicalities and commercial realities of the underlying construction dispute. I would not hesitate to recommend Mr Whittle to act as a mediator in any case in which I was a representative."

John Jessup, Barrister at 3 Paper Buildings, London.
